Text: THE CYCLONE CHEDZA

A cyclone hit the most part of Madagascar at a speed of about 220 kms an hour by the end of February through mid-March 2015. The East coast was probably the hardest damaged. In addition to the wind and the rain, there was the rise of the sea. As a result houses, schools, warehouses, and hospitals were flooded. Canoes were the only possible means of transport.

A local fisherman reported that roofs were blown off, trees were uprooted and electric poles were blown down. All the houses were totally destroyed. And in the rest, only certain concrete made buildings resisted to the cyclone.

A death roll of more than 70 was registered. Thousands of people became homeless. Some of them managed to stay with friends or relatives. Many had to be sheltered and looked after in tents, schools and town halls.

Help was not long to come. Rice, dry beans, canned food, medicines, nets were provided immediately. Later, the army began transporting the necessities to be shared to the victims. Some members of the government and local officials visited the devastated areas to see what should be done.
